THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR----BLOCKADES AND COAST DEFENSE.

By SEVERO GOMEZ NUNEZ, Captain of Artillery
[Translated from the Spanish.]

I FRANKLY acknowledge that I had considerable misgivings when I gave the first book of this work to the public.

I was afraid that a storm would be raised against it, and although I always try to use moderation in my criticism, I had at times to fight with so many obstacles in conforming to that line of conduct that I was tempted to tear up what I had written.

But the conviction triumphed within me that anyone who knows anything relative to the defeats we have suffered is under moral obligations to speak out, and that by doing so he renders a valuable service, because nothing is gained by suffering in silence; on the contrary, by clearly setting forth the facts we make the benefits inherent in truth accessible to all, and at the same time, by conveying an accurate knowledge of the errors which have brought us to our present pitiful condition, we gave a better understanding of the responsibilities which, in the distribution of the same, fall to each entity, and of the dangers which the future has in reserve for us —dangers of death, of absolute dissolution, of complete annihilation—which will fall down upon us with crushing force, unless we place our whole trust and energy at the service of one single idea, the defense, preservation, and development of what there is left to us of our country.

Fully convinced of the necessity of promulgating these theories, I put in print the second volume of The Spanish-American War, inspired by the same motives as set forth in the preface to that work, although at present I possess more freedom of action, since I do not labor under the disadvantage which I experienced before. The cause of this change is the good will and approval with which the public has received the first part of this work, entitled Ships, Guns, and Small Arms, and the kindness with which the press has commented upon it. From these circumstances I gather the conviction that the great mass of the people is not indifferent to the causes of the present terrible decline of Spain, and that therefore it will not be labor lost to examine into the disaster for the purpose of deriving lessons therefrom and obtaining the means for obviating still more radical misfortunes.

As the subject of the present volume, I propose to analyze the principal system of warfare (if I may be permitted to use that term) which the United States employed against our colonies—the blockade—in order to explain the fatal circumstances which rendered efficacious a course of action hitherto looked upon as a secondary means of little consequence in naval conflicts, and will then enter upon an analysis of coast defense and show, always with reference to the results of the Spanish-American war, how necessary it is for our country to prepare for the defensive, applying the maxim of less theory and more practice, less studies and more action.

LT. TOWNSEND WHELEN.
Co. "D" 1st Infantry.

And when I set down these words, with which I closed the first book of this work, it must not be supposed that I deem studies and theory superfluous; on the contrary, the less studies are required in the execution of anything, the more studies are necessary in the preparation therefor. Technical knowledge is becoming each day more indispensable, and we may be sure that as its foundation grows more solid the mind will be more and more freed from fantastical schemes, followed by irresolute action, with serious detriment to the service. What I mean is this, that to defend our coasts it is not sufficient to widen the field by studies a posteriori, when the essential thing, a knowledge of the harbors, is an already much abused matter, on the subject of which innumerable plans have been drawn and lucid essays written; we should also understand that our tendency should be to begin with the acquisition of the most modern and perfect material with which to equip our works of defense, because the factors of denfense and, to a certain extent, their location are subordinate to their equipment. There was a time when it was impossible to pursue the opposite course; that is to say, to construct fortifications with numerous emplacements for guns, which were to be had in large numbers; but nowadays, when guns are very expensive and of complicated construction, it is indispensable to have the guns first and adapt to them the works of defense, and that is precisely what requires a great deal of previous study on the part of those who are called upon to decide as to the acquisition of our future war material, because, as was said by a general of our army, well known for his scientific learning:

They would be inspired with the most complete knowledge of the technical principles which underlie modern inventions; and it is only with such knowledge and the application of the results achieved in other countries, together with further experiences in our own, that the problems which present themselves, one after another, can be speedily solved and the country prepared for the future.

To these ideas we might add the advisability of giving an impulse, on a large scale, to our military industries—gun, shell, cartridge, and powder factories—but as the men who are at present in charge of our military matters appear to have realized this, we do not deem it necessary to insist upon it.

But it should be remembered that nothing we have said is opposed to the rapid development of our defenses, with less studies and more action.

SEVERO GOMEZ NUNEZ.

CHAPTER I.

THE UNITED STATES PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Political Blindness—What Spain Could Do—What The United States Could Do—Naval Strategy.

Anyone who had not seen the war coming must have been blind.

* * * * * * * *

To us the war seemed inevitable and imminent. Nevertheless the news which reached Cuba from the Peninsula revealed great confidence that the conflict would be settled peaceably. The mistake was patent and the harm it worked was infinite. This hope should never have been harbored in Spain, and yet there were people who believed in it, and their belief seemed warranted by the absolute calm that reigned, for neither in Spain nor in Cuba were any of those rapid and energetic measures taken which the war demanded in the way of provisioning the country, concentrating the troops, and developing the naval power.

The plan of campaign of the United States commenced to be clearly outlined. The astonishing voracity of the press in that country gave free play to its anxiety and devoted itself to sketching the outlines of the naval and military operations likely to be undertaken against us. The Yankee strategists attached the greatest importance to our navy, which appeared to be quite strong judging from the published lists of our warships and the attributes with which they were credited, among others the speed and efficiency claimed for our destroyers, which really succeeded in producing a certain panic among the United States sailors. We feel sure that the exaggerated reports about the expedition of which they former part were not without influence on the subsequent manuevers of the United States squadron.

In the United States the war was considered so imminnt that more than two months before it broke out, namely, on February 13, the New York Herald gave to the press a complete plan of operations, which was considered of semiofficial character.[1]

Much of this plan was so rational that there could be no doubt as to its having been traced by an expert hand, and it might very well have been taken as a basis for the future policy of our country. But perhaps our Government had better information. W had not, and, moreover, there was so much consistency between what the plan said, what logical reasoning advised, and what the Americans did that we will take it for the basis of our argument.

It might be objected that there could be little foundation for a plan of war which was imparted beforehand to the enemy. Anticipating this objection, we will say that anyone who has lived in the United States and is acquainted with its mode of being knows that there is nothing hidden in that country. This special idiosyncrasy is carried to such a degree that even the most secret plans are published. As an example, we might cite the filibustering expeditions, which were always announced beforehand and afterwards confirmed by facts.

In the plan of war referred to, the following questions were discussed:

In case war should be declared between Spain and the United States, what would be the plans of campaign of the two nations?

Would Spain be the first to take the offensive?

Would the initial action be taken by the United States?

Would the struggle be easy if carried abroad, on land or on the sea, or in both places, and to what extent?

These different subjects are discussed in the following manner:

In strategy there are three things which demand special consideration:

(1) The base of operations.
(2) The objective.
(3)The line of operations.

The base of operations is the position from which the forces are able to advance and to which they can withdraw.

The objective comprises four different phases: Attack upon the enemy's commerce; bombardments of hostile ports; blockade of hostile coasts; invasion of hostile territory.

The line of operations designates the place where the fighting occurs —that is to say, the scene of war generally.

THE SPANISH BASE OF OPERATIONS.

The principal base of operations for Spain would be the Island of Cuba, and for the United States, Key West. Cuba is the largest island of the West Indies and the most important Spanish colony. It is situated at the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, 130 miles south of the State of Florida and 75 miles distant from Key West, frim which it is separated by the Florida Channel. To the east, the island is separated from Hatti by the Windward Passage, which is over 50 miles wide; 90 miles to the south, in the Caribbean Sea, lies the Island of Jamaica; to the west, Yucatan Channel, 130 miles wide, separates it from the nearest part of Central America.

The extent of its coasts, leaving minor sinuosities out of the question, is 2,000 miles. The littoral is very dangerous and full of rocks and reefs, and of sand banks extending several miles into the sea. Owing to these sand banks there are only few places where it is possible to land. There are not to exceed fourteen bays of sufficient depth to allow warships of average draught to enter.

Hence there are along the coasts arms of the sea which are protected by keys and sand banks and can only be entered through straits and sinuous channels, at the extremities of which the bays open, or which terminate toward the outside, between sand banks, in the shape of bays.

This configuration must be taken into consideration from a strategic standpoint and from the point of view of the advantages and disadvantages which these coasts present. From what has been stated it will be seen that it would not be a difficult operation to close the ports of Cuba against a foe and leave them open as places of safety and refuge for the friend.

WHAT SPAIN COULD DO.

For the defense of the eastern part of Cuba Spain could keep the Windward Passage under surveillance, using it as a lookout upon the Carribbean Sea. On that side the island terminates in Cape Maysi. The Windward Passage at the place where it separates this cape from Haiti is about 45 miles wide. Practically the whole navigation between the eastern coasts of the United States and the lower part of Central America goes through this passage. Cape Maysi is a point of low land, uninhabitable, without any port; the nearest anchorage is the harbor of Baracoa, 25 miles distant, on the northern coast of the island.

The base of operations of a squadron designed to blockade the Windward Passage might be either Baracoa on the northern coast or Guantanamo on the southern coast. The harbors of both are sufficiently deep for warships of large draught.

THE DEFENSIVE SQUADRON.

Two squadrons would be necessary, one to operate on the north from Baracoa, the other on the south from Guantanamo, and in order to insure co-operation between the two fleets a line would be required from sea to sea across the country. When this line is established and the patrol of the Windward Passage and the Caribbean Sea provided for, the action would have to be extended to the northern channels toward the central part of Cuba, farther remote from the passage referred to. For that purpose another harbor would be required to serve as a depot not far from Baracoa—Nipe, for instance, 75 miles distant from the former.

The harbor of Nipe is very safe and its water deep. This bay is 9 miles long and from 3 to 7 miles wide. The distance of 75 miles from Baracoa could be made by the squadron in five hours if necessary, or one division might be kept at Nipe and the other in the Windward Passage, one of which could be cruising while the other remained at its station.

BAHAMA CHANNEL.

From Nipe the Bahama Channel can be effectively blockaded by the Spanish fleet. The limits of the cruising line from Nipe might be 150 miles, from the Island of Lobos to Crooked Island, 600 miles from Puerto Rico.

A powerful hostile squadron might make an attack from the northeast, in which case the Bahama Channel and Windward Passage would play an important part, because it is there that the principal battles would take place.

The ships necessary to close these passages and operate in the south in case hostile forces should present themselves from that direction would be three armored cruisers, four cruisers of large tonnage, eight smaller ones (including gunboats and seagoing torpedo boats), and a few torpedo boats as adjuncts of the armored cruisers.

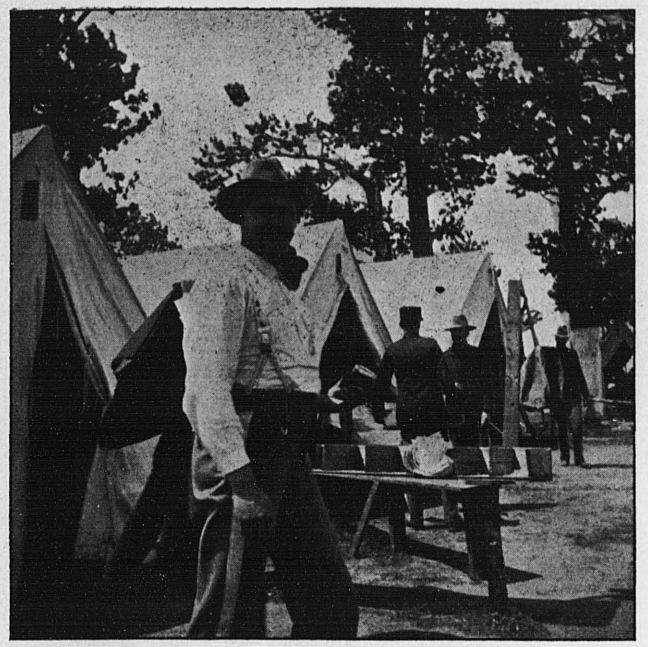
The fleet required to control the sea on the northern and eastern coast of Cuba might consist in all of three armored cruisers, situated 150 miles apart, four large protected cruisers at intermediate stations relative to the former, and eight smaller cruisers or gunboats between each of the large cruisers and the line of harbors which serve as bases.

Such a fleet, in the positions indicated, could be concentrated in twelve hours at any point where the enemy might appear with sufficient forces and with the intention of breaking through the line, and would moreover guard a good part of the Windward and Mona passages, so as to prevent hostile attacks from the south.

As we have stated, the squadron of the south might be stationed at Guantanamo; but this harbor might prove inadequate for the needs of the large squadron of the north, especially in connection with the southern squadron.

If that should be the case, the harbor of Santiago de Cuba would constitute a better base for the fleet, as it has better resources. It is situated five miles from the coast, and can be reached only through a narrow channel which is intricate and tortuous and in several places only 200 feet wide.

1 We consider it of sufficient importance to undertake the task of translating and publishing it in the Diario del Ejercito at Habana. It appears to have been inspired by the strategic board.



QUARTERMASTER PERKINS
15th Pa. Vol. Infty.

KEY TO THE ISLAND.

On the northwest Cuba is bounded by Florida Channel, 130 miles wide, and Yucatan Channel, 100 miles wide. For operations in Florida Channel, the base might be a line 40 miles, long connecting Habana with Matanzas. These two cities play the most important part from the standpoint of strategy and commerce.

Habana, the capital of Cuba, is the key to the island; but its defense, like those of all other Cuban harbors, are old and vulnerable and equipped with guns that are not adapted for attacks upon modern armored ships.

Habana is practically undefended,[1] and yet, by adequate defenses for its harbor and coasts, it might have been made an impregnable base of operations, and at the same time a base for refitting and a safe depot for men as well as supplies of every kind for the ships, and the center of the necessary reserves.

Matanzas, the other extreme point of the western base, is a much smaller city than Habana, its population reaching only 70,000 at most. The channel is four miles long and one mile wide, and is defended by three antiquated batteries.

The coast between Habana and Matanzas is open and can be safely navigated at a distance of three miles. Within this base the ships can cruise without danger by day and night. If the adversaries should attempt to effect a landing here, they might find it impossible, provided there were some mobile defenses and some means for harassing the enemy on the sea. This action could be further extended by controlling the 80 miles of the Florida Channel in the manner indicated below, and the result would be the destruction of the hostile commerce in that direction. A first-class battleship could be stationed midway of the channel, 40 miles from Habana, and one armored cruiser between this battleship and Key West, and another between the battleship and Habana. On both sides of the line formed by these three large ships would be placed large protected cruisers, and in the intervals between them dispatch boats.

YUCATAN CHANNEL.

In this arm of the sea might be stationed three cruisers, assisted by three or four gunboats, to watch for and pursue merchant vessels. At Cape San Antonio there are no harbors, but good anchorages are quite near where the gunboats could have their stations. In case they should find it necessary to go into port, there is Batabano, between cays, but well marked by buoys, and with 12 feet of water. Gunboats would be quite safe here, because no large ships can enter from without.

ATTACK UPON COMMERCE.

Having indicated the bases of operations which Spain might occupy in order to render both the defensive and offensive effective, and having examined into this second and most important conception of strategy, we will branch out on some other considerations.

1 In treating of the defenses of Habana we shall see how erroneous this opinion was.

The principal objective of attack will be the enemy's maritime commerce. The disposition of the Spanish fleet as above set forth will facilitate the pursuit of United States vessels navigating in the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico.

THE COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES.

All merchant vessels bound for Central America passing through the straits between the West Indian Islands would be at the mercy of a couple of cruisers of the "Alabama" type.

If Spain wanted to operate against the commerce of the United States, she would have to watch, besides the Caribbean Sea, the outer part of the Gulf Stream, beginning at Cape Hatteras, in the vicinity of which the merchant vessels bound for the south usually leave the Gulf to avoid the current.

Another important point where the commerce with North America might be intercepted is about 1,000 to 1,200 miles east of New York, in a circle not exceeding 300 miles in diameter. At this place pass all the merchant vessels from Europe bound for the eastern ports of the United States.

THE SPANISH COMMERCE ENDANGERED.

We should remember that in warfare upon commerce the party attacking may suffer as much damage as the party attacked. Suppose Spain should intend the destruction of the United States commerce. In that case she might lose her own maritime commerce, for the simple reason that she would be compelled to devote the ships which are necessary for the protection of her commercial routes to the pursuit and destruction of hostile merchant vessels in the courses which they in their turn have to follow.

The Spanish merchant marine consists of 960 vessels, 402 of which are steamers of over 1,000 tons; 37 of these have a tonnage of over 3,000 and 37 are of tonnage between 2,000 and 3,000. Thirty-two of all the merchant vessels have a speed of 12 knots, and only 2 of them attain 16 knots an hour. These latter vessels are therefore subventioned by the Government, and in case of war they must be placed at the disposal of Spain. The greater part of her commerce would be placed outside of her flag.

BOMBARDMENTS AND BLOCKADES.

Among the main objectives is the possibility of Spain bombarding, blockading, or invading the United States coasts.

Bombardments appear attractive, but would not be of much avail, if practicable at all. The large cities of the United States cannot be reached by the guns of a hostile fleet without great danger to the fleet itself. A superior and powerful navy might take the risk, but for an inferior navy like the Spanish it would mean meeting disaster half way.

THE QUESTION of delinquent members is giving the captains much trouble, especially in the city organizations. It is claimed that after a summary court-martial is held, and men tried for non-attendance of drill and the sentence imposed the sheriffs refuse to accept the prisoners, stating that the military authorities have made no provision for maintenance of prisoners and that the county jails are only intended for prisoners tried by the civil courts. We would therefore suggest that an additional appropriation be allowed regimental headquarters for the purpose of defraying the expense of providing for such prisoners. Or a better plan might be to have a State military jail centrally located and supervised as in the regular establishment.

THERE is a contemplated change in the artillery branch of our service which we feel will prove a detriment rather than an advanced step. It has been known for sometime past that certain persons want all machine guns, stating that this ordinance would be more effective for riot purpose than the heavy field pieces. This is sure to take away from the Batteries that interest in gunnery which has been manifest so long in our Guard. And we might suggest that one of the greatest improvements that could be made in this branch is to equip each Battery with four 3.2 inch guns and 2 Colts automatic pieces, transferring the Gatling guns to each of the infantry regiments as they are usually the first to reach the field and a small piece of ordnance that would grind out 1,400 rounds a minute might be effectually used before the arrival of the artillery.

THE ratings of the recent inspections seem to be very unsatisfactory throughout the division. It is a known fact that in several cases companies were re-inspected and received a much higher average than those companies who went through the ordeal according to the original schedule.

Many captains also complain of not receiving proper recognition for the percentage of attendance during the drill season, saying that many companies who parade only from 12 to 25 men on drill nights, and who manage to parade nearly their full strength on inspection occasions, come out just as well as the company commanders, who continually "hustle" to bring out good attendance at each drill.

Several of the regimental commanders have suggested the assignment of a regular army officer to hold the rank of assistant inspector general on the Governor's staff, to receive pay accordingly, and to hold a State commission during the term of his assignment. In this manner have one officer to inspect the entire Guard and thus dispense with the Brigade inspectors. It is believed that if this plan is adopted better results will follow.

IT is bad enough to have all kinds of semi-military organizations assimilate the uniforms of the National and State soldiers, but when it comes to electric cab motormen wearing the full regulation officers' great coats which is now in practice in the City of New York, we feel it is high time for Congress to take some action prohibiting the wearing of uniforms or parts thereof by anyone excepting those lawfully entitled to wear the same.

Personal Mention

Col. Wm. F. Mechling, of the 15th Infantry, is doing everything in his power to bring about a successful re-organization of the command. The present condition of the regiment is a peculiar one. At the present time it really consists of but one Battalion. Companies "C," "D," "G," having been disbanded. We sincerely hope that Col. Mechling may bring the regiment back to its old time standard.

The Easter Number of the "Cheltenham Reveille," published in the interest of the Cheltenham Academy, at Ogontz, Pa., is a very interesting as well as artistic number, and it shows that the Academy is sustaining its reputation as one of the best military educational institutions in the country. The faculty headed by Dr. John Skilton and Major A. D. Sayer as the Commandant of Cadets, are largely responsible for the many late improvements at the Academy.

Prospects for the building of the new "Armory" of the 1st Troop, Philadelphia City Cavalry, are very encouraging. It is stated that the entire amount of $75,000 will be raised by the membership of the Troop.

"Pete" Kelly, who has been the ambulance driver of the 3d Cavalry for twenty years, is next in line for the decoration to be awarded to the man having the longest continuous service in the Guard.

The first medal was awarded to a private in the 2d Infantry.

General Elwell S. Otis, Commander-in-Chief of our forces in the Philippines, is to return to the United States some time in May.

General Otis was married in the old Bauman Homestead, in the City of Wilkesbarre, which is now the beautiful residence of Col. C. Bow Dougherty, 9th Infantry.

Major A. Merritt Taylor, Quartermaster of the 1st Brigade, displayed his military ability when he planned and captured a bold gang of robbers on April 7th, who broke into the car barn of the West Chester Traction Co., from which they had been stealing large quantities of expensive wire.

Alexander's Band of 75 soloists has been enlisted in our 9th Infantry," and Colonel Dougherty now has one of the finest musical aggregations in the State.

Captain Charles S. W. Jones of the Sheridan Troop may become Chief of Cavalry, attached to the Governor's Staff.

Captain Thomas E. Gillman, who was elected Captain of Co. "A" of the 13th Infantry on April 2, has a long and honorable record. He first enlisted in Co. "D" of the "13th," September 12, 1886, and gradually advanced from a Corporalcy in 1891 to a Sergeantcy in 1893, then as 1st Sergeant, in '94 and '95 found him a 2d and 1st Lieutenant, finally, in 1897, Captain of the Company in which he had enlisted nearly ten years before.

Captain Gillman resigned June 24, 1899. During the Spanish-American War he commanded Co. "D" of the 13th Penna. Volunteer Infantry, serving from May 5, 1898, to March 11, 1899, when the regiment was mustered out of the United States service.

Captain Glliman, prior to his National Guard connection was a cavalryman in the British service and took part in several engagements during the Egyptian Campaign.

Corporal Edward F. Hunsicker, brother of Captain Hunsicker, is a probable candidate for the 2d Lieutenancy of Co. "F" of the 6th Infantry in the event of the Captain's promotion to the junior majority of the "Hayrakers."

Col. Thomas H. Maginness, who has been in Cuba superintending a colony of the Cuban Land and Steamship Co., has returned to Philadelphia in order to attend the wedding of his oldest daughter, "Elsie,' who is to be married to Mr. James Thompson, Chief Clerk, Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Colonel will return to La Gloria, Cuba, immediately after the wedding.

There has been much said about the Provisional Guard. While one regiment was a positive disgrace to the State the "Guard" in general was a credit to any Commonwealth, and some of the best Companies in our present establishment received their training under the "Provisional" officers. We can safely say that Pennsylvania was the only State in the "Union" that had a thoroughly organized Guard to take the place of the old regiments that were mustered into the United States service during the Spanish-American War.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor "Our State, Army and Navy."

Dear Sir:—What was the official title of our regiments after they entered the service of the United States during the Spanish-American War?

A member of the 1st Regiment Veteran Corps.

Answer.—The official designation was "1st Penna. Volunteer Infantry.

ORDERS FOR SENTINELS ON POST.

Orders for sentinels on post are divided into two classes, general orders and special orders.

Sentinels will be required to memorize the following:

My general orders are:

To take charge of this post and all Government property in view;

To walk my post in a military manner, keeping constantly on the alert, observing everything that takes place within sight or hearing;

To report every breach of orders or regulations that I am instructed to enforce;

To repeat all calls from posts more distant from the guard house than my own;

To quit my post only when properly relieved;

To receive, transmit, and obey all orders from, and allow myself to be relieved by the commanding officer, officer of the day, an officer or non-commissioned officer of the guard only;

To hold conversation with no one except in the proper discharge of my duty;

In case of fire or disorder to give the alarm;

To allow no one to commit nuisance in vicinity of my post;

In any case not covered by instructions, to call the corporal of the guard;

To salute all officers, and colors or standards not cased;

At night to exercise the greatest vigilance. Between retreat (—— o'clock, naming the hour designated by the commanding officer) and broad daylight, challenge all persons seen on or near my post, and allow no one to pass without proper authority.

In addition to the foregoing, sentinels posted at the guardhouse or guard tent will be required to memorize the following:

Between the reveille and retreat, to turn out the guard for all persons entitled to the compliment, for all colors or standards not cased, and for all armed parties approaching my post, except troops at drill and detachments of the guard.

At night, after challenging any person or party, to advance no one, but call the corporal of the guard, repeating the answer to the challenge.

ARMORY DEPARTMENT.

The G. A . R. Executive Committee Reports Favorably on the Scheme.

A combined meeting of the executive committee of the Allegheny County Grand Army Association and a committee of five from the Pittsburg Armory and Auditorium Association was held in the Schmidt building to discuss the proposed Grand Army department which the armory association have offered to erect in connection with the National Guard quarters. At the last meeting of the Grand Army Association a committee composed of Mayor Deihl, S. W. Hill, Norman M. Smith, George V. Marshall and A. B. Burchfield made the proposition to the different posts. By motion the matter was referred to the executive committee as soon as that body should be appointed. The two committees met in order that the members of the Grand Army might get a concise idea of the proposed Grand Army department of the armory building.

The project was described by Mayor Diehl. It is proposed to have a fire-proof receptacle for all war relics of Allegheny County. This includes all American wars. In addition to this there is to be a memorial hall capable of seating about 300 people, to be used for Grand Army purposes after the membership is so reduced that the different posts will be obliged to consolidate into one organization. This hall will be surrounded with memorial tablets bearing inscriptions in commemoration of war heroes. It is also proposed to have a list prepared of all soldiers who enlisted in American wars from Allegheny County.

Thomas G. Sample made a motion that the executive committee report favorably to the Grand Army Association in regard to the proposal which was adopted. A sub-committee consisting of five members of the executive committee was appointed to meet with the armory association to discuss plans for raising more money for the armory fund.

CAPTAIN LUCIEN M. WILER.

Captain Lucien M. Wiler comes from a military family whose records date back to the early Indian Wars. His father, who recently died at the age of 85 years, was regarded as one of the Stalwarts of the original National Guards, organized January 16, 1861, and assisted very materially in the organization of the Infantry Corps from which the Second Regiment is a direct continuance. He was also one of the executive committee who purchased the site and built the old National Guard Armory on Race street, below Sixth. During the war of the Rebellion he was a member of Co. E of the famous 3d Pennsylvania Reserves.

Captain Wiler entered the Andalusia Academy in 1875 and graduated therefrom in '78. In 1894 he became identified with Co. D, of the 3d Infantry, and after assisting in its re-organization he was tendered the position of Captain of Co. E of the 2d Infantry. This was June 4, 1896, the election being unanimous. At the breaking out of the Spanish-American War Captain Wiler and his Company of noble volunteers promptly responded and were mustered into the United States service on May 13, 1898. In pursuance of S. O. No. 105, Department of the East, the first battalion was ordered to report to Monchanin, Delaware, to guard the Dupont Powder Mills. On September 15, 1898, the regiment was ordered to Philadelphia to be mustered out. This ceremony occurred on October 13, 1898. Immediately upon the re-organization of the State service Captain Wiler was one of the first to have his Company back in the National Guard. This occurred February 28, 1899. He is well known throughout the State as an able tactician and a thorough up-to-date citizen-soldier.

The portable gun-rack is the work of Capt. Wiler. See advertisement on page 16.
